Transthyretin is a predominantly liversynthesized transporter that is thought to play an important role in the transport of thyroxine and retinol. The purpose of this study was to determine whether the serum transthyretin concentration is altered in patients with inflammatory bowel disease.

Plasma transthyretin concentrations in 10 patients with Crohn's disease, 10 with ulcerative colitis, and 10 healthy control subjects were measured. No difference was found in transthyretin levels between patients with Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis, nor between patients with ulcerative colitis and control subjects. A significant difference, however, was found between the transthyretin concentrations of patients with Crohn's disease and control subjects (13.6 ± 0.6 v 14.8 ± 0.8 micrograms/ml; $P = 0.01$). We conclude that transthyretin levels are not altered in patients with inflammatory bowel disease. However, transthyretin levels are elevated in patients with Crohn's disease when compared with control subjects.
